

The PTO takes no money from taxpayers; instead, it is fully funded by user fees, generating $1 billion per year. Unfortunately, appropriators and the administration treat the PTO like a savings and loan and divert its money every year for other government programs. To date, over $600 million in fees has been diverted since 1992. This coming year alone, the appropriators are taking $200 million.

Not surprisingly, this diversion is taking its toll. The PTO cannot hire or retain qualified patent examiners with advanced scientific degrees; they prefer the more lucrative salaries in the private sector. The PTO also cannot update its computer systems to thoroughly search databases of information and determine whether patent applications really disclose new and nonobvious inventions; this makes it that more likely for the PTO to issue a bad patent. Finally, just a few years ago it took the PTO 19.5 months to rule on a patent application; it now takes 26 months, and is expected to be 38.6 months by 2006. At that rate, inventions will be obsolete before they're patented.

We cannot let the PTO and American inventors continue to suffer this way. H.R. 2047—introduced by Chairman COBLE, Ranking Member BERMAN, and myself—resolves the problem by letting the PTO keep all of its fiscal year 2002 fees. It also lets the PTO use some of its money to modernize its electronic filing systems. The bill finally requires the PTO to develop a five-year strategic plan explaining what resources it needs to better serve its customers. This plan will make it easier for Congress to make future oversight decisions. I urge my colleagues to vote "yes" on this legislation.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the high-tech industry plays a prominent role in our economy. That's why it's important to allow the U.S. Patent and Trade Office (USPTO) to retain its user fees. Timely and quality service provided by the PTO helps spur innovation and strengthen our economy.

H.R. 2047 is a good bill that has three basic components. It allows the patent office to retain its fees, which are normally distributed for other government operations. This extra funding will speed up the processing of patent applications that now takes an average of nearly 27 months. If these fees continue to be diverted, pendency—the time from filing to granting of a patent—may increase to 38 months by 2006.

In recent years, the number of technology and biotechnology patents has increased. Now more than ever, it's important to ensure that the PTO has adequate funding through its own fee mechanisms. The PTO must produce high quality patents on a timely basis. It is struggling to keep up with the workload and lacks new technology that is desperately needed to do its job.

The bill directs and PTO to develop and implement an electronic system for filing and processing applications. It also orders the director of the patent office to develop a 5-year strategic plan to improve and streamline patent operations.

I urge my colleagues to support this important measure so that the PTO can improve its critical role in our economy.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 2047, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, today the House will send to the President for his signature H.R. 768, the Need-Based Educational Aid Act of 2001. This bill was introduced by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SMITH) and the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. FRANK), and I appreciate their hard work on this issue.

Mr. Speaker, beginning in the mid-1950s, a number of prestigious private colleges and universities agreed to award institutional financial aid, that is, aid from the schools' own funds, solely on the basis of demonstrated financial need. These schools also agreed to use common principles to assist each student's financial need and to give essentially the same financial aid award to students admitted to more than one member of the group.

From the 1950s through the late 1980s, the practice continued undisturbed. In 1989, the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice brought suit against nine of the colleges that engaged in this practice. After extensive litigation, the parties reached a final settlement in 1993.

In 1994, Congress passed a temporary exemption from the antitrust laws that basically codified the settlement. It allowed agreements to provide aid on the basis of need only, to use common principles of need analysis, to use a common financial aid application form, and to allow the exchange of the students' financial information through a third party. It also prohibited agreements on award to specific students. It provided for this exemption to expire on September 30, 1997. That year, Congress extended the exemption until September 30, 2001.

Under this exemption, the affected schools have adopted a set of general principles to determine eligibility for institutional aid. These principles address issues like expected contribution from noncustodial parents, treatment of depreciation expenses that may reduce a parent's income, valuation of rental properties, and unusually high medical expenses. Common treatment of these types of issues make sense, and to my knowledge, the existing exemption has worked well.

The need-based financial aid system serves goals that the antitrust laws do not adequately address, namely, making financial aid available to the broadest number of students solely on the basis of demonstrated need. Without it, the schools would be required to compete, through financial aid awards, to the very top students. Those very top students would get all the aid available, which would be more than they need. The rest would get less or none at all. Ultimately, such a system would serve to undermine the principle of need-based aid and need-blind admissions.

No student who is otherwise qualified ought to be denied the opportunity to attend one of the Nation's most prestigious schools because of the financial situation of his or her family. H.R. 768 will help protect need-based aid and need-blind admissions and preserve that opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, unlike the original House bill, which permanently extended the 1994 exemption, the Senate amendment to H.R. 768 would extend the exemption for another 7 years, and it also directs the General Accounting Office to review the exemption. It would not make any change to the substance of the exemption. I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I want to express my appreciation to the chairman of the full committee for so diligently staying on this and bringing this forward. I want to express my particular appreciation to the gentleman from Texas, who has now joined us, who has been one of the leaders in making sure that we do this.

The gentleman from Wisconsin has explained this very well, and I just want to underline a few points. It seemed to me at the time a great misfortune and irony that the Justice Department was seeking to invoke the antitrust law against the universities that were engaged in this practice. It is one of the most socially responsible things that they do.

Essentially, what we have are among the most prestigious universities in the country, which people are eager to go to, saying that they believe they have an obligation in spending scholarship money to maximize the extent to which scholarship money enables poor or moderate-income young people to attend. The sole purpose of this whole enterprise is to extend the reach of scholarship aid based on need. For that to have been challenged on antitrust grounds seemed to me at the time a grave error.

I am delighted to have been able to work all this time, particularly with the gentleman from Texas, to go to the aid of universities that are trying to do the right thing. What this says is that the universities can exchange information and they can share information; not to raise prices, not to pay less to suppliers, not to do any of the things that the antitrust law is aimed at preventing, but rather, to maximize the extent to which financial aid goes to the young people who need it.

There is a great deal of controversy in our government about the extent to which, when the government is acting, we can take into account compensatory and other factors. Here we have the ideal situation. All of these institutions are wholly private institutions. They are not constrained by the various rules that government needs to follow. They have done this voluntarily, and I am very pleased that, over time, the number of institutions has expanded. I am proud to represent one of them, Wellesley College from Wellesley, Massachusetts. They have volunteered to take on extra work among themselves so as not to diminish the pool of scholarship funds available to those who are needy, and I think that is something well worth doing.

Now, I know an amendment has come back from the Senate calling for a GAO study. We are not in the process of amendment here; we are in suspension. If we were in a situation where amendments were in order, I think I would be tempted in this case to offer the amendment that I once offered in the Committee on Financial Services; namely, that any Member of Congress who offers an amendment requiring a study be required to read that study when it is completed and take a public exam on its contents, because we have this tendency to burden people with compiling studies that no one, including us, ever reads. I myself do not think in this case the study is necessary, and I think it burdens universities, who are trying to do a good thing, with excess work. But that is the price of getting this bill passed. It is a fairly small price to pay for an important piece of legislation that does advance an important social goal.

I salute the universities and, again, I want to express my gratitude to the two gentlemen from the majority side for the work they have done in bringing this forward.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, let it be clear that this exemption expired on October 1, and if the exemption is not reinstated and continued, well-endowed private colleges and universities, the gentleman from Massachusetts has several in his State, and I am a graduate of one of them, and the gentleman from Texas is also a graduate of one of them, will basically be able to use their superior financial resources to buy out the best students, generally by giving them more money than they really need for financial aid, even though the tuition at these colleges and universities is pretty steep.

By passing this bill and by reinstating the exemption, there will be more money to go around to more good students and to open the doors to these well-endowed, prestigious private colleges and universities to more people to be able to go there.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SMITH).

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, first I would like to thank the chairman of the committee for yielding me time. I would also like to thank the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. FRANK) for his earlier generous comments.

Beginning in the mid-1950s, a number of private colleges and universities agreed to award financial aid solely on the basis of demonstrated need. These schools also agreed to use common criteria to assess each student's financial need and to give the same financial aid award to students admitted to more than one member of the group.

In 1989, the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice brought suit against nine of the colleges that engage in this practice. After extensive litigation, the parties reached a settlement in 1993.

In 1994 and again in 1997, Congress passed a temporary exemption from the antitrust laws that codified that settlement. It allowed agreements to provide aid on the basis of need only, use common criteria, use a common financial aid application form, and allow the exchange of the student's financial information through a third party. It also prohibited agreements on awards to specific students. The exemption expired, as the chairman just noted a minute ago, on September 30, 2001.

To my knowledge, there are no complaints about the exemption. H.R. 768 would extend the exemption passed in 1994 and 1997 for 7 more years.

The need-based financial aid system serves goals that the antitrust laws do not adequately address, namely, making financial aid available to the broadest number of students solely on the basis of demonstrated need. No student who is otherwise qualified should be denied the opportunity to go to a private, selective university because of the limited financial means of his or her family. H.R. 768 will help protect need-based aid and need-blind admissions.

Last April we approved a permanent extension by an overwhelming margin of 414 to zero. However, the Senate has approved only a 7-year extension. They also call for the General Accounting Office to study the effects of the exemption and to submit a report in 5 years. If the GAO chooses to examine a comparison group of schools for the study, participation in the group would be voluntary. It is this version that we vote upon today.

Mr. Speaker, I still believe that a permanent exemption from the antitrust laws is justified and warranted. However, in the interest of time, the House should accept the changes made by the Senate, and I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULBERSON). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) that the House suspend the rules and concur in the Senate amendments to the bill, H.R. 768.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.
